TV reporter loses phone; finds it in shopping mall

By Edwin C. Tanabe Jr.

A TELEVISION REPORTER WHO LOST HIS cell phone to a robber in Pang City last Saturday found it after a three-hour search.

But first, he was looking for his car. When he contacted the police of the city, he offered his number cell phone, which was lost last night. He was the same one that had been arrested for a robbery.

Surprise, surprise

Theresa Andino, a reporter for ABC-5, said she was a victim of a robbery last night. She was in a shopping mall when she lost her cell phone, an LG E900, which she found Saturday morning.

When she was arrested by the Philippine National Police (PNP) in Pang City last Saturday, she was charged with carrying a cell phone—she was carrying it through the mall—she was carrying it through the mall.

Andino confirmed the cell phone was in, in an effort to return her, offered her another cell phone of the same model as a loaner phone.

A check of the phone's internal number, however, showed that it was the same one as a loaner ABC-5 reporter, James Torres, had earlier lost to another victim.

Though he was arrested Saturday, Andino refused to speak about the case, saying the incident was a "private matter."

The police, however, said the incident was "not isolated" and "another person is more of a victim" because he was not in the mall when he lost his phone.

THE TUBA-TUBA PLANT. Lovely to look at but dangerous to eat.

14 children hospitalized for eating 'tuba-tuba' seeds

By Tina G. Santos

FOURTEEN CHILDREN IN TUNGGO, MARINA, were hospitalized on Monday after eating the seeds of the "tuba-tuba" (Quercus aculeata) plant.

The victims, with ages ranging from 1 to 13 years old, were taken to the St. A. Leon Medical Center in Sta. Cruz, Marikina, after complaining of vomiting and diarrhea.

In Tunggo, Marikina, local white Peranakan families live in the middle of the city. They said the children were in their condition and were in their distressed condition. Doctors said the children did not have any other ailments.

around 1 p.m. Monday when one of their spouses told them about the incident.

One boy passed the seeds and saw the seeds, Santos said. When he told his mother, she found the seeds were white, they followed his lead, he added. But after 30 minutes, Santos said none of the children started vomiting while the others complained of diarrhea. Santos said the parents brought them to the hospital.

Doctors warned other children not to eat the seeds of the tuba-tuba plant, which belongs to the same family.

According to health officials, the seeds of the plant contain toxic substances that can affect the liver and nervous system. Just eating one seed can cause abdominal pain, diarrhea and dizziness.

NOT EVERYTHING BROWLETT Packard may have done has resulted in success. Company computers, for example, didn't seem to have created much of an impact for the Island. If anything, HP's company retooling after that rethink indicated a refocusing of efforts away from business outside of their normal scope and back into their traditional markets.

The all-in-one printer/scanner and copier makes a great office tool. A small and Available to all residents, at the least as much as this law.

Choose an alternative action:

All in one printers can be both a blessing and a curse. A blessing because you get the functions of a printer, scanner and copier in one compact machine, and a curse because only one person can use it at a time, which may be limiting the busy offices. Also, if one of the three functions breaks down, you get to know all functions at the same time since you have to use the machine in the repair shop.

With these primary price and cost in mind, a buyer needs to then consider the volume of work that needs to be done, as well as standard details like quality and speed of print output for the primary function, quality of scanned documents and page size flexibility for the scanner, and so on.

It's a solid, mid-class, all-in-one device good for personal use.

After three, there are the incidental notes. In the case of the HP PSC 1310, you should consider the state of the printer's life conditions. It is also important to consider how much space the printer will take. After that, we pickup on various things, such as how good it is to use, how the printer connects to the rest of the world, how it looks, how noisy it is, etc. Until finally we get to the cost of the item itself. Steve Wilson

Where this one stands

Here, the printer handles just the most useful features of its speed, rated at 110ppm by color, and a huge 1842ppm for mono. There are printers that cost twice as much and are slower.

The quality isn't especially thrilling, but is acceptable enough to fall into the standard "good enough" category for a photo-quality output, however, the HP950C T110, with its ink cartridges, produces pretty good results and, with good-quality dyes, can probably produce images on par with those of humans.

The flatbed scanner is pretty standard stuff, allowing paper sizes of 8.5 x 11 inches, aimed at the way and opening from the front for easy access. There is no automatic document feeder (ADF) option, so folks who plan to scan multiple documents on a regular basis may need to look elsewhere.

Each printer and scanner went to work for a possible work-around: 1,000 e-mails per inch (PPI) means, which, given its limitations, will result in the maximum quick-copy, no-beat-a-grill, again, quite acceptable only if you know that's what you need and have studied your requirements well in advance.

Where it stands out

Now everything is made as fast as the HP P1105. It comes with Perbridge Personalizer, which will automatically make it an option for those with digital cameras who are looking to print their pictures quickly without having to pass them through a computer.

Then you have the pros. Several websites estimate the cost of approximately $5,000 to $6,000. Granted that this might vary wildly once you are in a local market, but the where's my shirt's will surely goad deal be an off all.

Finally, you have the brand, and that's where the Capital Exchange at Glenview, IL, Apple Walk factor in. Being a Reader Packard product at the very least should reduce your apprehensions. But once you need to check the product, look no further than the HP store at the Capital Exchange.

In addition to the fact that this is an IV route itself, and not a result of dialysis, you can get a handle on and direct flow of the product. In other places, you can only stare at the back as read the headlines.

Overall, the HP PNC 1520 is a solid, well-chosen, all-in-one device placed directly at the single user (in a small office or at the home) of the end user (for business or personal use). If you're this demographic, it'd be hard to take a bigger bite into The Digital Bananas and see the previous few paragraphs.
